URGES CONGREGATION TO LEAD A SIMPLE LIFE.

Rabbi Harrison Takes Pastor Charles Wagner's Book as Text for Sermon.

for a few moments.

The second prisoner started to the rescue of his friend, but a well-directed blow of a bystander staggered him long enough to allow the deputies to secure the other prisoner.

Justice Campbell issued warrants against the men charging them with disturbing Pastor Charles Wagner's book, "The Simple Life," which is being published in The Republic, was chosen as the text of denunciation of modern society by Rabbi Harrison in his address at Temple Israel yesterday morning. In comparing the "simple life," as set forth by Pastor Wagner, with the complex life of to-day, Rabbi Harrison declared society, "with its struggles to climb from the ranks of the common herd," to be the arch enemy of simplicity.

Rabbi Harrison said that the life of today meant a life of undesired complexity, caused by the passion for success, for entrance into "the would-be elect called so-

Rabbi Harrison declared that as simplicity was easy of attainment it had been perforce tabooed of society, whose main object is to retard imitation by the multitude.

"In society," said Rabbi Harrison, "we behold the outre and the bizarre, enything to titillate the exhausted sensibilities, banquets where the fashionables entertain monkeys at table, the hosts and the guests outle indistinguishable save by the tain monkeys at table, the hosts and the guests quite indistinguishable save by the superior worth and naturalness of the guests.

"We behold fashion through expensive and rapid variations, striving to create differences; we behold juxury, extravagance, dileness, demoralization; the divorce court and worse; the vices of European nobles without their virtues, their leadership, their splendid traditions of public service."

their splendid traditions of public service."

A still greater menace to the simple life lurked in the imitation of fashion by those outside the bounds of society, declared Rabbi Harrison.

Expensive funerals among the rich were stigmatized as remnants of an abominable and wicked custom, and that their imitation by the poor was responsible for a large share of the poverty prevailing among the poorer classes.

Rabbi Harrison closed his address with an exhortation to the members of his congregation to set an example of leading the simple life, to follow the teaching of the French pastor who has so suddenly sprung into celebrity through his message to "an enervated generation."

A Modern Miracle.

A Modern Miracle.

In one of Barr's Olive street windows is a display that attracts the attention of the passer-by. The window is a faithful reproduction of a ladies' dressing-room, even to the wall paper, pictures, dressing table and all the toilet accessories of a refined woman. A beautiful young lady sitting at a dressing table takes up a hand mirror and is astonished to see some hair growing on her lip. Bhe takes a piece of cotton and washes it with "De Miracle" and puts it to her lip. The hair immediately disappears and one can almost see her look of joy as her beauty is restored. The figure is remarkably lifelke and is attracting the attention of thousands. It is intended to demonstrate the merits of "De Miracle." a preparation for removing superfluous hair. The enterprise of the Wm. Barr Dry Goods Company in bringing this display here is to be commended.
